

More and more qualified people are moving from poor to rich countries to fill vacancies in specialist areas like engineering and medicine. Some people believe that by encouraging the movement of such people, rich countries are stealing from poor countries. Others feel that this is only part of the natural movement of workers around the world. Do you agree or disagree?

The popular trend in the world which is qualified people decide to move from poor to rich countries in order to work in a better environment or to fill vacancy in specialist areas such as international technology, medical, entertainment. Even though there are some disagreement about this statement but in my opinion, I think the trend should be stopped.

Actually, people who have been studying in colleges or universities always dreaming about their expecting job after they finished their study. Thus, many developed countries base on that then they look for potential students and offer them for a greater job opportunity than in their home countries. For example, in Vietnam, nowadays, multinational companies are expanding widely and they hired many Vietnamese employees with a very cheap income. However, they are also finding some of the best employees and asking them for a higher salary, a better job than they has already earning in their hometown if they want to work abroad. Unsurprisingly, most of people sigh to a contract and transfer to a new and richer countries.

Personally, I think this trend should not be stopped because this is a positive thing and good for poor countries to train their labor to a new level of working. Furthermore, qualified people move to rich countries to improve their skills like an IT workers learn cutting edge technologies, so, it might be a good opportunity for them to come back and help to develop their home countries, I suggest rich countries should encourage the employees to work in their home country after the journey.

The trend qualified people move from poor countries to richer countries is definitely should maintain throughout the world. It is a good way to help the globalization and make the distance between poor and rich countries is closer.

Revised

~~The~~ One popular trend in the world ~~which~~ is qualified people decidinge to move from poor to rich countries in order to work in a better environment, ~~-or~~ in order to fill vacanciesy in specialist areas such as international technology, medical, and entertainment. Even though ~~there are some disagreement~~s about this statement, ~~-but~~ in my opinion, I think the trend should be stopped.

Actually, people who have been studying in colleges or universities always dream ing about ~~the their expecting~~ jobs after they finished their study. Thus, many developed countries base on that then they look for potential students and offer them ~~for a~~ greater job opportunity than in their home countries. For example, in Vietnam, nowadays, multinational companies are expanding widely and they hired many Vietnamese employees ~~with a very cheap income at very low rates of pay~~. However, they are also finding some of the best employees and ~~asking them for~~ ~~offering them a~~ higher salary, ~~and a~~ better job than ~~they has already earning~~ ~~can get~~ in their hometown if they ~~want to~~ ~~will~~ work abroad. Unsurprisingly, most ~~of~~ people ~~then sign~~ ~~h~~ to a contract and transfer to ~~the~~ new and richer countries.

Formatted: Tab stops: 3.49 cm, Left

Personally, I think this trend should not be stopped because this is a positive thing and good for poor countries to train their labor to a new level of working. Furthermore, qualified people move to rich countries to improve their skills. ~~For example, like~~ an IT workers ~~might~~ learn cutting edge technologies, so; it might be a good opportunity for them to come back and help to develop their home countries, I suggest rich countries should encourage the employees to work in their home country after the journey.

The trend qualified people move from poor countries to richer countries is definitely ~~good and~~ should ~~be~~ ~~maintained~~ throughout the world. It is a ~~good~~ way to help ~~the~~ globalization and make the distance between poor and rich countries ~~is closer~~ ~~smaller~~.

Better length than the other essay, but I'm not sure of your opinion. You appear to change your opinion after the introduction. Be careful to proofread.