

The increasing role of English in the world today means that the learning of other language is being neglected. This will have serious results for the continued use of these language. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Globalization has encourage people to use the same language in order be convenient in communicating. Therefore, English, which has been wildly used all over the world because of the development of the British Empire in the past, become more and more popular. However, some people afraid that this would lead to the end of other languages. In my opinion, other languages would never be neglected despite the wave of English.

Firstly, although English is being taught more widely, especially, it has been taught along with mother tongue in schools, not everyone has an opportunity of get access to this international language equivalently. For example, in some countries such as Vietnam, there are differences between the countryside and urban areas. While urban children are often told about the necessity of English more and from very soon, children in countryside may not care much about English because they think that it wouldn't be useful in their future life. Since, there has existed inequality of English quality between regions like that, mother tongue would be still important.

Next, nations in the world would never lost their own languages and would never stop teaching their mother tongue and replace it with English. Although the economic of a country would grow more strongly if every people in the country were able to speak English fluently; however, forgetting mother tongue also means that country has lose its culture as well as its characteristics. I believe those heritages, which sometimes can't be assessed through money but are very valuable in spirit, are only expressed the most precisely in mother tongue. Moreover, we can present our country's history in English in order for the world can understand deeply about our nation, but definitely we can't learn and love that history without knowing our mother tongue.

However, the truth is some languages in the world has vanished since a few years ago and some cultural traits of ethnic minorities are not able to found out. But unlike German, French or Spain, those language are extremely rare.

In conclusion, I believe that English will still play an important role in international relationships in the future. Although it can blur the appearance of other languages, but they will still remain as essential tools to maintain different cultures.

Revised

Globalization has encouraged d people to use the same language in order ~~be to~~ convenient in make communicating convenient. Therefore, English, which has been ~~wildly widely~~ used all over the world because of the development of the British Empire in the past, has become even more and more popular. However, some people are afraid that this ~~would could~~ lead to the end of other languages. In my opinion, other languages would never be neglected despite the wave of English.

Firstly, although English especially is being taught more widely, ~~especially,~~ it has been taught along with mother tongues in schools, and not everyone has an opportunity of get access to this international language equivalently. For example, in some countries such as Vietnam, there are differences between the countryside and urban areas. While urban children are often told about the necessity of English more and from very ~~soon~~ early in their lives, children in countryside may not care much about English because they think that it wouldn't be useful in their future life. Since, there ~~has continues to existed~~ inequality of English quality between regions like that, mother tongues ~~would~~ will continue be still important.

Next, nations in the world would never ~~lost lose~~ their own languages and would never stop teaching their mother tongue and replace it with English. Although the ~~economie economy~~ of a country would grow more strongly if every people in the country were able to speak English fluently; however, forgetting the mother tongue also means that country ~~has will~~ lose its culture as well as its characteristics. I believe those heritages, which sometimes can't be assessed ~~through money~~ financially but are very valuable in spirit, and are only expressed the most precisely in the mother tongue. Moreover, we can present our country's history in English in order for the world can understand deeply about our nation, but definitely we can't learn and love that history without knowing our mother tongue.

However, the truth is some languages in the world ~~has have~~ vanished ~~since a few years ago~~ and some cultural traits of ethnic minorities are not able to be found ~~out~~ anymore. But unlike German, French or Spain, those language are extremely rare.

In conclusion, I believe that English will still play an important role in international relationships in the future. Although it can blur the appearance of other languages, ~~but~~ they will still remain as essential tools to maintain different cultures.

Nice essay. Careful with hypothetical language. We will review some of it in class soon. Good job.