

The economic globalization will bring about greater benefits for developed countries than for developing ones as the former countries enjoy comparative advantages in technology and managerial skills over the latter ones. To what extent do you agree?

Globalization is a certain trend of the world that takes place in many fields, especially in economy. This process, surely, would provide various opportunities for some countries and also cause some bad effects for other countries. There is an idea that developed countries will be more benefit than developing ones, but I do not agree. I firmly believe that advantages of the economic globalization will come to the countries which they can grasp it.

First of all, economic globalization is a big chance for every country to develop their economy. This globalization means that the goods of countries in over the world can exchange easily without some stuck by high taxes, policies and so on. Therefore, each country could export their strategic products to various market and import necessary goods simply with reasonable prices. WTO (world trade organization) is an example of economic globalization. By joining this organization, hundreds countries take a lot advantages for their economies.

Secondly, I think that economic globalization brings benefits for all countries, not specific one. The issue is the way which countries respond this process. If a country is dynamic, means that it has the fabulous leaders and flexible policies, it would adjust quickly to be suitable with new circumstance. For instance, while some developed countries focus on modern technology and managerial skills, developing ones have to know their strength such as cheap labour, various natural resources to develop reasonably.

However, there is a truth that developed countries will be easier in globalization. By the good foundation such as complete infrastructure, modern technology, high level managers, they can capture the chances effectively. Therefore, developing countries have to not only mobilize their all sources but also learn and get achievements of former countries.

In general, economic globalization is a common tendency. It brings lots of benefits for all countries which know how to take it effectively.

Revised

Globalization is a certain trend of the world that takes place in many fields, especially in the economy. This process, surely, ~~would~~provides various opportunities for some countries and also ~~causes~~s some bad effects for other countries. There is an idea that developed countries will ~~be~~receive more ~~benefits~~s than developing ones, but I do not agree. I firmly believe that the advantages of ~~the~~ economic globalization will come to the countries which ~~they can~~grasp ~~it~~them.

First of all, economic globalization ~~is~~offers a big chance for every country to develop ~~their~~its economy. ~~This~~globalization means that the goods of countries ~~in~~all over the world can ~~be~~exchanged ~~d~~ easily without some being stuck by high taxes, policies and so on. Therefore, each country ~~could~~can export their strategic products to various market and import necessary goods simply with reasonable prices. The WTO (world trade organization) is an example of economic globalization. By joining this organization, hundreds of countries ~~take~~ receive a lot advantages for their economies.

Secondly, I think that economic globalization brings benefits for all countries, not only specific ones. The issue is the way in which countries respond to this process. If a country is dynamic, which means that it has ~~the~~ fabulous leaders and flexible policies, it would adjust quickly to be suitable with new circumstances. For instance, while some developed countries focus on modern technology and managerial skills, developing ones have to know their strengths, such as cheap labour, or various natural resources, to develop reasonably.

However, ~~there~~ it is a truth that developed countries will ~~be easier in find~~ globalization easier. ~~By the~~ Having a good foundation, such as a complete infrastructure, modern technology, and high level managers, they can capture their ir chances effectively. Therefore, developing countries have to not only mobilize ~~their~~ all their resources but also to learn ~~and get from the~~ achievements of former countries.

In general, economic globalization is a common tendency. It brings lots of benefits for all countries which know how to take advantage of it effectively.

Good content. A little long at over 300 words. Remember that is not always a good idea to try to say all the the things you would in Vietnamese. More important to be careful with sentence structure.