

In many countries there is a shortage of housing due to a growing population. Some people argue that new towns should be built in the countryside., others argue for the regeneration of cities. What are the advantages and disadvantages of the building new towns in the countryside?

Today, the more dramatically the population increases, the more gradually ~~the~~ urbanisation develops. As a result, the lack of housing is one of the national problems that many countries care about. It is thought advantageous by some that the government should construct new towns ~~s~~ in rural areas ~~s~~, whereas many other people believe that cities should be regenerated. This essay illustrates the benefits and drawbacks of new towns in the countryside.

First of all, there are several advantages when it comes to the creation of new cities in rural areas. The first benefit is reduction of the difference of living standard between people who live in ~~the~~ countryside and in urban areas, especially ~~if various when~~ factories are built in the countryside. Consequently, most inhabitants are able to work in these firms and their ~~life-lives~~ ~~does~~ not depend on fields, farms and the weather, like sun, rain or storm. Therefore, their income remains stable and is higher than ~~a~~ farmers' profits. As a result, they gain ~~a~~ good standard of living. In addition, compared ~~d~~ to ~~the~~ cost of housing and ~~removing-removal of existing structures~~ in the cities, it is a good idea for people to construct ~~e~~ new towns in ~~the~~ countryside because they have to pay less money for farmers to move their houses and farms in order to have long and wide space to construct new infrastructure.

On the other hand, people have to invest a great amount of money to create new and basic infrastructure that includes transportation, water supply, electrical grids. In other words, new cities are unable to attract people to live ~~in them~~ if they have to suffer bad conditions to stay. For example, according to vietnam.gov.vn – an official website of Vietnam government, a new city in Bac Ninh province, which is located north of the capital of Vietnam ~~,~~ has been canceled because of ~~a~~ shortage of money. As a result, there are no people in the city and the investor ~~s~~ can-not be paid back. Moreover, creating new towns wastes ~~s~~ money and other resources ~~s~~ if people are not able to finish this work.

To sum up, everything has pros and cons. If people have a good plan for creating new cities and enough money, they can gain more from its benefits and reduce its disadvantages in order to solve the problem of housing. The faster the urbanisation of the rural areas rises, the ~~easier-sooner~~ the lack of ~~house-housing~~ will be resolved.

Much better. Hope you didn't find my comments insulting! Complicated ideas in this essay. Note its better to be specific. I think you mean removal of buildings/people...but just 'removing' isn't enough. Also I left it this time, but 'national' in the same sentence as country is redundant, and that's one of the things examiners look for. The idea in English is probably best expressed as 'domestic,' meaning problem within the country....Finally, you could use 'open' for long and wide...open space is a collocation!

A wonderful effort. You should be proud. Good job.
