

Topic: In most countries multinational companies and their products are becoming more and more important. This trend is seriously damaging our quality of life. To what extent, do you agree or disagree?

In the contemporary society, a huge number of multinational companies occur, which produce a wide range of products in the world market. Many people argue that this symbolizes the social development, but others afraid that it is stealing the quality from life.

This worry is obviously justified by a considerable shift in the consuming habit. In my country, for example, many people just like to buy the so-called high-quality products and expensive which are made by multinational companies. While local goods are relatively qualified and cheap, but being denied significantly. As a result of this, a lot of local companies are bankrupt.

Another affect of multinational companies is that they spread their power through my country. Seemingly it can be said that they make employment for many people, especially in the countryside. However, some countries become more dependent on them. A good example for this is that many workers lose their job when a company moves their facility to another country. Or although some companies do not pay salary for laborers deservedly, the government hardly can relate to the problem.

On the other hand, the multinational companies partly cause a loss of traditional customs. For instance, people in Vietnam frequently wear conventional clothes in the past, but the more open clothes are becoming loved instead these days.

The appearance of multinational companies is not only a good sign of adventure but also a harmful affect for traditions. This is serious enough to require the government's consideration. They should encourage people to support local companies as well as to protect valuable customs of the ancestors.

Revised

In the contemporary society, there are a huge number of multinational companies ~~occur~~, which produce a wide range of products in the world market. Many people argue that this ~~symbolizes theis good for~~-social development, but others are afraid that it is stealing the quality from life.

This worry is obviously justified by a considerable shift in the consuming habit. In my country, for example, many people just like to buy the so-called high-quality, expensive products ~~and expensive~~ which are made by multinational companies. While local goods are relatively high-qualityqualified and cheap, ~~but being they are not being purchased as much denied significantly~~. As a result of this, a lot of local companies are going bankrupt.

i

Another ~~affect-effect~~ of multinational companies is that they are -spreading their power through my country. Seemingly it can be said that they make employment for many people, especially in the countryside. However, some countries become ~~more~~ dependent on them. A good example for this is the way ~~at~~ many workers lose their job when a company moves ~~their-its~~ facility to another country. ~~A-Or~~ another is although some ~~the way~~ the government can't do much for laborers whose companies do not pay their salary. (note: try to avoid direct translation) ~~for laborers deservedly, the government hardly can relate to the problem.~~

On the other hand, the multinational companies partly cause a loss of traditional customs. For instance, people in Vietnam frequently w~~ore~~ ear conventional clothes in the past, but these days more open clothes are becoming ~~loved-worn~~ instead. ~~these days~~.

The appearance of multinational companies is not only ~~a~~ good for future development ~~sign of adventure~~ but also can have a harmful affect for traditions. This is serious enough to require the government's consideration. ~~It~~ They should encourage people to support local companies as well as to protect the valuable customs of their ancestors.

Excellent comment. Very good length. Avoid using "On the Other Hand..." unless this is an argument on the other side. Be careful with translation.