The bar chart illustrates the data of a survey that mentions the factors influencing the workers' accomplishment. It is carried out by the personnel department of a large-scale company. There are two groups of employees which were involved in the survey: some of them are from 18 to 30 and the others are between 45 and 60. According to the chart, these two factors that are team spirit and work environment affect both groups at the same level, 60 percent and 30 percent of the number of people respectively. There are also four other things that can make a virtually similar impact on two groups. About 50 percent of younger workers and a little more older ones are motivated by their knowledgeable bosses. 40 percent of the young people need to be respected by their colleagues and nearly 45 percent of the older ones have the same feeling. Approximately 52 percent of the first group and 50 percent of the second one agree that job satisfaction can be a considerable reason for their work. About 70 percent and 72 percent in turn think that salary can be also remarked in the survey. Nevertheless, we can see big differences in the four remaining elements. 90 percent of younger employees want to get some opportunities for personal development, whereas just nearly half of that, which are 40 percent of the olders, do so. A large number of the youngers, which are 80 percent, are likely to work in a relaxed environment, while only 30 percent of the olders have the same idea. Less than 20 percent of the old-aged workers refer the job security, while the corresponding percentage of the young-aged ones is twofold. The last consideration that are promotion prospects is pointed out by 80 percent and 50 percent of each group respectively.

Very complete report with clear information and good use of language. However at 300 words it is almost twice as long as necessary. Remember you need to produce the report in a maximum of 20 minutes. Be careful to use structures you are confident of and not to translate too much.
